INCREASING HUNGER AMONG POOR ELDERLY NEW YORKERS: CLOSING SENIOR CENTERS IN NYC HOUSING AUTHORITY BUILDINGS IN NEIGHBORHOODS THAT LACK SUPERMARKETS

August 1, 2008

Due to a budget deficit at the NYC Housing Authority (NYCHA), the city is planning to close dozens of senior centers located in NYCHA buildings. In 2003, a memorandum of understanding was signed between the Department for the Aging (DFTA) and NYCHA, which exchanged $30 million of city funds for federal HUD funds to help operate the 100 senior centers located in NYCHA buildings. DFTA continued to administer the programs. Only $18 million was added into the city budget to meet NYCHA's deficit - $195 million overall, with about $70 million for community services. It is unclear how much of these funds will go to senior centers as youth programs, day care and community centers are also at risk. Also, NYCHA is the largest landlord of poor elderly in NYC – one out of 3 NYCHA tenants, 175,000, are age 62+.

CSCS' 2007 study, "Hunger Hurts: A Study of Hunger Among New York City's Elderly", found that one-third of the seniors interviewed reported "food insecurity". This includes everything from fear of not having enough money for food, missing meals, to being hungry. The full study can be found at: <http://www.cscs-ny.org/advocacy.shtml>

To its credit, the Bloomberg administration has recently reconfigured the poverty measure. This resulted in poverty among elderly New Yorkers climbing from 18% to 32%, or one out of 3 seniors falling below poverty from one out of 5. In May 2008, City Planning released a study on neighborhoods that lack sufficient supermarkets. Not surprisingly, the communities in which poor elderly New Yorkers live and attend NYCHA senior centers also lack supermarkets as the following chart shows. The maps that follow the chart show where these senior centers are located.

We urge NYCHA, DFTA, the Bloomberg administration and City Council, as well as state and congressional elected officials, to do all they can to prevent the closing of senior centers that would deprive poor seniors of meals and services. Food prices are escalating. Seniors living on a fixed income are already facing challenges affording food.
